Alabama Executes Muslim Inmate who Requested Imam's Presence

42, sentenced to death for a 1995 rape and murder, was executed February 8 in Atmore, Alabama. Ray had filed a legal challenge because Alabama wouldn't let his Islamic spiritual adviser be present in the execution chamber.

Appeals stayed the execution over the religious arguments, but the U.S. Supreme Court allowed it to proceed in a 5-4 decision. The Supreme Court's order did not deal with the religious issue, but said that Ray's request on January 28 was made too late. His lawyers and the dissenting Supreme Court justices disagreed.

A Christian chaplain who works for the prison system is in place for other executions. Ray argued that Alabama's procedure favors Christian inmates, but the state said only prison employees are allowed for security reasons.

Robert Dunham, executive director of the Death Penalty Information Center, said that other Christian chaplain in the chamber, states allow spiritual advisers to a concession the state allowed.

Muslim inmate Dominique Ray, accompany condemned inmates up to the execution chamber but not into it, but that he did not know of any other state where the protocol calls for a Christian chaplain to be present in the execution chamber.

According to the Washington The 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Post, Amir Ali, Supreme Court and appellate counsel at MacArthur Justice Center, said the court's order was in contrast with recent decisions that have protected religious rights. "Consider the opposite circumstance - a Christian person who is told that, during the final moments of his life, he can have only the services of an Imam," Ali wrote. "It is hard to imagine the court reaching the same result as it did here. And that's a real problem because the very purpose of the Establishment Clause is to prevent this sort of religious preference."

Imam Yusef Maisonet watched the execution from an adjoining witness room. There was no

Jehovah's Witness in Russia Sentenced to Six Years Jail

A Russian court has sentenced a Jehovah's Witness to six years in prison for promoting extremism.

"Such activity can promote disunity along religious lines...[in] an environment that must be open and welcoming to all," the appeals court ruled last year.

- Proposed Senate Bill 20 in the New Mexico State Senate would allow individuals to change their birth certificate gender identity to male, female, or the letter "X" for undesignated or other gender; and no longer require people to prove they've gone through surgery before changing their birth certificate.
- Masterpiece Cakeshop and the State of Colorado agreed to drop their ongoing, six-year-long legal battle on March 5. Jack Phillips, the shop owner who refused to create a cake for a same-sex couple's wedding, agreed to dismiss his federal case, and the Colorado Civil Rights Commission will dismiss the state action against Masterpiece.
- The Supreme Court has declined to become involved in a religious liberty dispute about using taxpayer funds for historic preservation at churches. "At some point, this court will need to decide whether governments that distribute historic preservation funds may deny funds to religious organizations simply because the organizations are religious," Justice Brett Kavanaugh wrote. De-registering University's Christian Student Group Violates First Amendment the District of Iowa ruled in February that the University of Iowa violated the First Amendment rights of a Christian student group, Business Leaders in Christ (BLinC). The University had de-registered the group because it required its student leaders to sign a statement of faith which included religious beliefs about sexuality and sexual identity.

BLinC is a student group at University of Iowa. Using Bible study, fellowship, and networking in the Christian mitted that BLinC did not community, the group offers to help Christians learn "how to continually keep Christ first in the fast-paced statement of business world." The U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ) less of their filed a statement arguing that University of Iowa tation or genhad violated BLinC's First der identity, Amendment rights to free association, free speech, their and the free exercise of religion, and the court agreed. makes LGBT

The U.S. District Court for The university was ordered to allow the student group to follow its religious values when selecting leadership.

University policies do not allow discrimination based on sexual orientation and gender identity, but BLinC, though putting no limitations on general membership, requires its leaders to sign and follow its statement of faith, including a belief that sexual relations should be limited to husband and wife.

Southern States Weighing School Vouchers

National School Choice Week was in January 2019, and school vouchers are in the news across Southern Union territory:

- Public school educators in Alabama are trying to have private school vouchers repealed.
- The Florida Senate has stated it will revisit laws on vouchers which the Florida Supreme court had previously ruled against, now that the court will have more conservative justices.

- Georgia's new lieutenant governor has declared he wants to broaden school choice.
- Kentucky will be introducing legislation to create the Scholarship Tax Credit for school choice.

- Parents and students are rallying for school choice in Mississippi.
- A poll in North Carolina found that Democrats are the strongest in favor of the state's Opportunity Scholarship voucher program for private schools.

- In South Carolina, where a school choice bill was voted down in 2018, the governor is calling for a 5% teacher raise, joining other states wary of teacher walkouts.
- In Tennessee legislation for school vouchers is being considered.
