The God-given right of religious liberty is best exercised when church and state are separate.

Government is God's agency to protect individual rights and to conduct civil affairs; in exercising these responsibilities, officials are entitled to respect and cooperation.

Religious liberty entails freedom to conscience: to worship or not to worship; to profess, practice and promulgate religious beliefs, or to change them. In exercising these rights, however, one must respect the equivalent rights of others.

Attempts to unite church and state are opposed to the interests of each, subversive of human rights, and potentially prosecuting in character; to oppose union, lawfully and honorably, is not only the citizen's duty but the essence of the golden rule – to treat others as one wishes to be treated.
